The sentence, unprecedented in Diritain in modern times, came after the tall, dark-haired Blake had pleaded guilty to five charges under the Official Secrets Act.

Blake was tool by the Lord Chief Justice, Lord Parker, "Your case to one of the worst that can be envisaged in times of peace." Four conduct in many other countries would unstookledly carry the death penalty."

A Smile, Then He Turns

Blake, a married man, stood looking straight ahead as he heard Lord Parker's words.

The sentences came after the court had been in camera for 54 minutes. Public and Press had been excluded after Mr. Jeremy Hutchinson, Q.C., defending, said he had been told that much of what he would be saying in mitigation should not be said in public.

saying in mitigation should not be said in public.

When the court reopened, Lord Parker told Blake:
"When the court reopened, Lord Parker told Blake:
"A to the court fail written confession reveals that for some agent and spying for a foreign Power.

"Moreover the information communicated, though not of, a scientific nature, was elearly of the utmost importance to that Power and has rendered much of this country's efforts compitely useless."

Confession Stays Secret

Concession Stays Secret

Lord Parter said that were one realised Blake was a British subject and was throughout the period enjoyed by his country in a responsible position of trust, it was clear his action was akin to treason.

Opening the case for the Grown, the Attorney-General, Sir Reginald Manningham-Builer, had said the Concession "must remain secret." We passages flate's contession "must remain secret."

According to the statement he had communicated amass of information to the Russians.

Blake, said the Attorney-General, had "done most sections damage to the interest unit reely admit there was not an official document of any importance to which I had access which was not passed to my Soviet contact."
